emily sky fashions gives back

Well-timed to coincide with Breast Cancer Awareness Month, Emily Sky Fashions held its “semi-annual “Shopping For A Cause” on October 7th, where 10% of all proceeds from the day’s sales were donated to charity. Earnings from the Plainview store were given to Making Strides For Breast Cancer, the annual walk hosted by The American Cancer Society.

Held this year on October 23 at Jones Beach, the walk raised thousands of dollars locally and millions nationwide for Breast Cancer research and awareness thanks the strong efforts of individuals and teams through sponsorships. Funds from the Emily Sky sale were donated via The Rebels With A Cause team; team captain (and 5-year Breast cancer survivor) Susan Cohen co-hosted the sale with Emily Sky owner Laura Greenfield, but fellow teammates and Emily Sky’s staff were on hand to share the festivities. When we caught up with the sale in the early morning, the store was already buzzing with enthusiastic customers. After all, Emily Sky Fashions offers an eclectic blend of up-to-the-moment classic and trendy styles as well as vintage inspired clothing and jewelry. Their great selection at numerous price points and congenial sales staff makes shopping at Emily Sky a fantastic experience, but when it’s coupled with giving to charity, you have a win-win situation!

The same excitement was being generated at the Commack location, and their proceeds were donated to the Sunrise Fund, a foundation at Stony Brook Hospital established to raise awareness about childhood cancer and to raise funds for specific projects, support services, facilities and research programs. The donation was to honor Sara Long Harte, a devoted and beloved teacher within the Cedarhurst School District who passed away over the summer.

This sale was one of three events Emily Sky Fashions hosts throughout the year. Other “Shopping For A Cause” sales have benefited Colon Cancer Awareness and Research and Last Hope Animal Rescue. Shopping for fashion has never felt so good.
